1998: city growth still elusive, but edging closer

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Houses aren't springing up in any great number during this year's construction season in West Sacramento. But city planning director Stephen Patek, who had earlier predicted several hundred homes would be built in the area in 1998, remained upbeat about future residential growth.

"It's just the way things go," he said. "It has taken people a bit longer to get their plans and financing in order than expected."

Southport -- West Sacramento's southern half -- is expected to bear the lion's share of city residential growth, adding to a current city population of about 30,000. Among the first developments to be built could be the Lewis Homes subdivision near Higgins Rd. and Jefferson Blvd. The development, planned originally for 93 homes plus a commercial area, is attempting to replace the commercial acreage with additional houses.

The Gateway development, future home to about 330 homes near South River Road and the railroad tracks, could also see bulldozers before 1998 is over.

"It looks very, very close to us issuing a subdivision map," said Patek.

Another pending project is the Newport subdivision, located west of South River Road and north of Linden Rd., will be home to roughly 800 housing units of various kinds. A project map has been approved.

Plans for a 250--home subdivision called River Ranch, west of Newport and close to the Our Lady of Grace School on Linden Rd., will go before the city planning commission on Thursday. The project is proposed by Bryan Turner of West Sacramento Land Company.

Westward and southward is the 1,300-home Gainsborough project, near Marshall Rd. and the deep water channel. Though plans are far advanced, Patek said he didn't expect significant activity at Gainsborough this year.

One place in Southport that is experiencing "an incredible amount of infrastructure" work, said Patek, is the Southport Industrial Park located near the deep water channel in Southoport's northwest area. "That's really all that's been happening in the area," said Patek.

High turnover among Golden State Middle School teaching staff?

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

The strife of a new principal's administration at West Sacramento's Golden State Middle School seems to have contributed to a high faculty turnover at the school in recent months.

One teacher said she had counted 19 resignations out of a faculty of about 65 at the school, with most of those resignations being related to differences with new principal Janette Clark.

Clark said that number was "very inaccurate" and added that the school had "filled every position except two," but said she did not have a figure for the number of teachers who have left.

Former G.S.M.S. teacher Christine Wax, who said she "definitely left because of the situation there," said she counted 14 resignations from the beginning of Clark's tenure to the time of her own resignation several weeks ago. All but a few of those were in response to differences with management, she added.

School district personnel manager Jan Berger said she was aware of the turnover rate, but declined to release information on it. Superintendent Dr. Dennis Kelleher said he did not immediately have the data. He did, however, provide an estimate for the number of people who had left the school.

"I think it's more like 12 out of 75," said Kelleher, "but still that's high, no question about it," Kelleher stated. "This time of year it's very common to lose people. Also we have a lot of changes going on, including the ballot proposition forcing changes in bilingual education. And some left because of the principal, but many did not leave because of the principal."

Kelleher said there will be a communications workshop this month involving representatives from both the teachers and district management, attempting to resolve any differences.

Correction

A press release printed in last week's News-Ledger under the heading of "Civic Center design" erred in stating that the city's current senior center at 664 Cummins Way will remain open after a planned new senior center is built as part of a new civic center near Merkley Ave. and West Capitol Ave.

The Cummins Way facility will be replaced by the new development, a city official said this week.

West Sac native Steve Gillman sculpts state memorial for veterans

ARTIST'S RENDERING of California Veterans Memorial, now under construction in Sacramento's Capitol Park

By Daryl Fisher
Features Editor

In a few months, the long awaited California Veterans Memorial, which is currently being erected on the grounds of the state Capitol in downtown Sacramento between 13th and 14th streets, will be officially opened to visitors. Citizens from throughout the state as well as all of California's living governors will attend the ceremonies. The memorial is unique in the sense that it is intended to honor all Californians who have served in the United States military since the beginning of statehood in 1850.

The memorial will consist of a plaza amongst a grove of trees and the focal point will be a sculptured granite obelisk, which will be split into four pieces and set on the four points of the compass. In addition to the monument, the memorial will contain a registry of California veterans and granite pavers engraved with the names of veterans and organizations who have helped fund the project. All the money needed for the construction of the memorial was raised through private contributions.

West Sacramento has a special connection to the California Veterans Memorial because Steve Gillman, who grew up in this area and attended local elementary schools and graduated from James Marshall High School in 1963, is the project's sculptor.

"My mother taught kindergarten in West Sacramento," recalled Gillman, "and I still have fond memories of growing up there. Just like everyone else back then, my friends and I used to cruise 'K' Street on Friday and Saturday nights and we also hung out at Kelly's Drive-In quite a bit. West Sacramento is one of those places which has changed a lot in the past couple of decades, yet in many ways, it hasn't really changed at all."

After graduating from James Marshall, Gillman studied at Sacramento State College, San Francisco State College and the University of Oregon before enrolling at the University of California at Davis, where he received his masters degree in fine arts.

> 'West Sacramento is one of those places which has changed a lot in the past couple of decades, yet in many ways, it hasn't really changed at all.'
> -- SCULPTOR STEVE GILLMAN

"The University of California at Davis has probably the best graduate art program in the state," said Gillman, "and the time I studied there was very well spent."

It wasn't until Gillman was in his early 30s that he discovered he had a very special talent for sculpting. He began responding to publicized public arts projects and he now has pieces on display throughout central and northern California, including two at Cal Davis, and others in San Francisco, Sunnyvale, Danville, and one at the Federal Court House in Sacramento.

"The California Veterans Memorial project came about in much the same way I've been chosen to do other public arts works," explained Gillman. "It was an open competition and I responded to a RFQ (request for qualifications) which is basically slides of my past work, and then after a rather lengthy process, I made it to the final group, which I believe consisted of about five other individuals. The very fine work of San Francisco architect Olle Lundberg and memorial artist Katherine Keefer were indispensable to being awarded the contract."

Once Gillman had been unanimously chosen by the California Veterans Memorial Commission to do the memorial, there was much to do.

"Projects this big are always collaborative efforts," said Gillman, "but you begin by studying the site, seeing who uses it, how they use it, then you go over the budget, come up with ideas and themes -- it's really very time-consuming. On this particular project, to give you some idea of the complexity, the black granite which is being used was quarried in California, then it went all the way to Minnesota to be cut and polished, and then it returned to Sacramento to be sandblasted."

In addition to sculptors and artists, the California Veterans Memorial required the services of general contractors, architects, structural engineers, landscape architects and subcontractors with specific skills in such areas as earthworks, granite, concrete, computer graphics, engraving, telecommunications, and electrical engineering.

"The final design appeals to me on a number of different levels," said Gillman, "and I especially think the photo imagining on the obelisk is going to be pretty stunning. There are also so many people to thank, like state architect Harry Hallenbeck, who deserves a lot of the credit for pulling the whole thing together, and of course all the individuals, veteran's groups, and corporations who gave the funds which made it all possible. I'm very proud of my contribution to the project, and I hope those who visit the memorial will find it worthy of the sacrifices so many Californians have made for their country."

For more information, or to donate or submit your name to the veteran's registry, write to the California Veterans Memorial, 1227 "O" Street, Room 304, Sacramento, CA 95814. What angry wasps and tennis balls have in common

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

The other evening my oldest son, who lives in a one-room backyard addition we added to the house a few years ago, came looking for me and said, "Something really strange is going on in my bedroom, Dad. You better come out and take a look."

"Do I have to do it right this minute?" I asked him, having just settled down in front of the television set to watch a San Francisco Giants baseball game.

"Yes," he said with emphasis. "There's a really weird noise coming from my ceiling, and it's getting louder all the time."

"What kind of noise is it?" I asked with interest.

"Well," he tried to explain, "it kind of sounds like a bowl of Rice Krispies right after you pour in the milk."

"What?" I asked with a smile. "You mean your ceiling is going 'snap, crackle and pop'?"

"It's not funny," he assured me. "It's been going on for a week now, and it's starting to drive me nuts."

"Okay," I said reluctantly, "but this better be good."

Once we were both inside my son's bedroom, he turned off the fan, his computer and anything else which made even the slightest noise, and we both began straining our ears to hear the 'snap, crackle and pop' sound. "Can't you hear that?" he finally asked me after a minute or so.

"Sorry," I said, "but I don't hear a thing."

"You've got to be kidding," he said with disbelief. "That's the loudest it's ever been."

"My ears aren't what they used to be," I admitted.

"But you'd have to be deaf not to hear that!"

"Sorry," I said again as I patted him on the shoulder and hurried back to the Giants game.

"Mom!" yelled my son, apparently interested in a second opinion.

The next day, while my son was at work, I went out into his room and listened again for the 'snap, crackle and pop' sound, and although I still couldn't hear it, I did happen to notice that an uncommon number of bees were buzzing around just outside his window. On closer examination, I discovered that they were busy coming in and going out of one of the little circular vent holes which had been left in the roof for attic air circulation.

"Well, I think I've found out what that noise is you've been talking about," I informed my son when he got home from work.

"What?" he asked with excitement, having told his mother that if the noise didn't stop soon he was going to move back into the house so he could get some sleep.

"There's a bee nest in the ceiling," I said. "Right above your bed."

"You've got to be kidding?" he said with alarm, having never been very fond of stinging insects.

"They're probably running around in there doing bee things and that's what you've been hearing."

"What are you going to do about it?" he demanded to know.

"I'm not really sure," I admitted, having never run into the problem before.

"Can't we just kill them?"

"I don't want to kill a bunch of honey bees," I said. "They spend their whole day pollinating flowers and doing other good deeds."

"Are you talking about those bees that hang out by my window?" he asked.

"Those are the ones alright."

"You're not only deaf, Dad," said my son, slowly shaking his head, "but you're blind, too. Those aren't honey bees, those are wasps."

Sure enough, on closer examination, my son was right, and we quickly began exploring deadly scenarios which might get rid of the problem once and for all. To begin with, I got up on a ladder (while my son hid behind a tree a good twenty yards away) and I sprayed the heck out of them with a product accurately called Kill Zone. Wasps immediately began dropping like flies, but by the next afternoon, a whole new group was once again happily buzzing in and out of the little circular vent hole.

Next, I talked to a building contractor, who told me to call an exterminator or a professional bee keeper. I quickly discovered that those two options would cost an arm and a leg, and after giving the matter quite a bit of thought, I decided to try a cheaper, somewhat low-tech method of dealing with the problem.

"You did what?" asked my son in amazement.

"I stuck one of your tennis balls in the hole," I repeated again. "It fits perfectly."

"But that's not going to stop the noise!" he shouted. "That's just going to tick them off! And they're living right above my bed. What if they try to find a new way out -- and end up in my room some night when I'm asleep. They're going to be mad as hell!"

"Don't worry," I said. "They'll all probably be dead in a few days."

"Mom!"

Victims recovering, man turns self in after last week's hit-and run

A man has turned himself in to police in connection with an early morning, Aug. 22, hit and run accident which left two other men riding a bicycle injured. Both victims are recovering from injuries.

The day after the accident, Stephen Gunn, 40, of West Sacramento, called police from a local church to say he may have struck someone on bicycle the morning before. After an investigation, he was arrested Aug. 26.

Scott Alan Edadiz, 22, suffered a broken femur. Cory Alan Pryor, 19 (who was riding on the handlebard) suffered several broken vertebrae and a broken ankle, said police.

If you want her to have a shot at reaching the stars, she needs to get her baby shots now.

Every child deserves the best opportunities life has to offer. Especially yours.

The odds of her becoming an astronaut and reaching the stars are out of this world. But the chances are more than 1 in 4 that your baby isn't protected against childhood diseases like polio, measles, chicken pox, tetanus and others.

So, even if you're sure your child is up to date and on schedule with her baby shots, ask your doctor at every visit. It couldn't hurt.

In fact, it could give her the chance to grow up to be whatever she wants to be.

Even if it's something out of this world.

The Sports Insider

A week has come and gone in the N.L. wild card race and the Giants didn't manage to gain any ground on the Mets or the Cubs. The Giants, who still trail the Cubs and Mets by 2 games, have 23 games remaining in their schedule of which 11 are at home sweet home! If your Giants fan you'll love this weekend because the Giants travel to Los Angeles for a 3 game weekend series with the Dodgers. Shawn Estes returns to the pitching rotation on Friday night against L.A. The Giants also expanded their 25 man roster with six new faces for the last run at the wild-card spot.

The Giants recalled from Fresno: pitchers Alvin Morman, Cory Bailey, outfielders Armando Rios, Chris Jones, infielder Ramon Martinez and catcher Doug Mirabelli. The Dodgers on the other hand will be short handed this weekend with All-Star Gary Sheffield, out with a sprained ankle.

Remember at the beginning of the baseball season when I suggested that this could be the year Mark McGwire and Ken Griffey Jr. could break the Major League record of 61 home runs! That's right, if you read by column back in April, I predicted that with two new expansion teams the major leagues pitching staffs would be very weak. I had that gut feeling that this could be the year, but were did Slammin-Sammy Sosa come from? I would love to see both this sluggers break Roger Maris's record?

The 49ers open the N.F.L. season this Sunday at home against the 7 ½ point underdog N.Y. Jets.

49ers 27- Jets 23.

The 49ers cut both their kicker and punter this week as the N.F.L. required teams to trim their rosters to 53 players. The Niners were impressed by rookie kicker Wade Richey, who was cut by Seattle, and he didn't disappoint them in his first game as a 49ers! Richey connected on two long field goals in the 49ers 21-20 loss in Seattle but his kick-offs into the end zone really caught the coaches eye. He also had a 64 yard game winning attempt miss the cross bar by inches! Let's wait and see if he can handle the pressure in a real game!

The Raiders finished the preseason with another home loss last Saturday that attracted less than 35,000 fans to the Oakland Stadium. Looks like Raiders fans can expect another season of games blacked out in the Sacramento Area. The Raiders will open up the season in Kansas City as 7 ½ point underdogs on the ESPN (5 p.m.) game of the week.

Kansas City 31 , Oakland 17

Let's talk about the N.F.L. season and which teams will be serious contenders for Super Bowl XXXII.

In the N.F.C. the 49ers will have an easy time in the weak Western division but the other two divisions should provide football fans with some great competion. In the Central division the Packers will have their hands full with Tampa Bay, Detroit and the re-vamped Vikings.

I think three teams from this division will make the playoffs. In the East, its a coin toss between the Cowboys, Redskins and the Giants. The N.F.C. champs will be Tampa Bay!

In the A.F.C., the Kansas City Chiefs will win the Western Division after a close battle with the Broncos. In the Central division the Baltimore Ravens will battle the Pittsburgh Steelers. The Eastern Conference should be the fun division to watch with the Dolphins, Jets, Patriots and Bills all fighting for play-off spot. The A.F.C champs will be Kansas City.

OPINION

News-Ledger Editor:

Congratulations

Did you see in the news where an American Little League team beat a team from Japan to win the Little League World Championship?

A group of local kids and their adult supporters must have been watching the play with great interest. West Sacramento's team, after all, made it unusually far in the tournament process, representing the city with great honor.

Good job, guys & gals -- and wait til next year!

The planned Staples office supply store should give us a gentle lesson in real life economics.

You may have noticed that the store, planned for a spot near Harbor Blvd. and Evergreen Ave. in West Sacramento, did not come in response to a campaign from or incentives offered by city officials. It just came. As Mayor Beers pointed out, this is usually just the way it works: when a location is riped for a store, it will come, and incentives such as tax rebates make little difference in the decision or the timing.

So let's be careful not to "give away the store" in the process of trying to get the store.

Letters to the Editor

Civic center design

I applaud last week's editorial. At last someone has come out and said something that needs to be said. What direction will the city take in determining the next city hall? Squeezing a city hall complex between motel row?

What kind of visual statement will they try to dream up?

Right now the City Redevelopment Agency has a lot of property up for sale. Especially in "old Broderick/Washington District." It looks like the city "over bought land" now they want to sell it. Let's hope they sell it for more than the purchased price.

Some of the land holdings are rather large. Why is it that the city feels compelled to place the city hall complex on West Capitol Ave.? Because it's in the "center?" The "center" of what?

Why not use some of the land already owned by the City of West Sacramento?

Right now the City has an opportunity to create a unique Civic Center located in Old Broderick/Washington. Historically the original county seat of Yolo County. Why not seize this chance to create something really special in conjunction with the riverfront parkway, the Money Store, the old Victorians, the Art Deco firehouse, more Art components promised by the city, and the 5th street widening improvement which is costing the city over 2 million dollars or more to complete for 2 blocks of improved road and bike lanes.

Of all the locations in our "fair city" the "Old Washington District" should seriously be looked at as a city hall/civic center. This area has a lot more charm than "Motel Row." After all Washington is the birth place of our community and our present school district continues to bear its name.

Supporting local health care

Two weeks ago, The Palms Playhouse hosted a Saturday night benefit for CommuniCare Health Centers. For those in the community who missed the fun, we're sorry. For those of you who joined us, thanks for your support.

And for the band, Mike McGowan and the Roadmasters, a big happy hug. To paraphrase the words of the band's great leader and West Sacramento's own Yolo County Supervisor, we all had, "...more fun than any adult has a right to!" Great music, great dancing, great venue, great crowd, and a great cause.

All ticket proceeds will be used to provide primary medical and dental care for local low income residents through CommuniCare's four clinics -- Peterson Clinic in Woodland, John H. Jones Community Clinic and Salud Clinic in West Sacramento and the Davis Community Clinic.

Once again praiseworthy people made a difference and they had fun doing it!

Parental involvement

During a discussion about education with my father-in-law, he felt I had left an important element of education out of one of my letters, I agree. Parents are a crucial element for the success of students. When I wrote my previous letter, I was looking at what the school district could do to motivate and encourage students to become educated and successful, this week I'll look at the role parents can and should play in order to insure the success of their children in school.

PTA meetings used to have 50, 100, even 150 parents in attendance. Now-a-days 20 parents represents a large PTA. Two income families, single parents, and busy schedules all contribute to parents unable to actively participate in the education of their children. Too often we are unable to work at our children's schools, help them with their homework, be with them when they get home or participate in school activities. All these are important to our children and to their success in school and life.

When a teacher, school or school district sets high standards for the students several parties are responsible for the success of the high standards. The school district needs to provide adequate funding, clear direction, and the support staff to reach these high standards. The school needs to provide competent teachers, a supportive staff, a focus on success and the expectation of success. Students need to understand the expectations of them and then they need to work hard to meet these expectations. Finally parents need to provide their children with the opportunity for success; a quiet place for home work, encouragement for both a job well done and for a good effort, and be supportive of the effort made by teachers and administrators.

As a teacher, I recognize the need for parents to get involved in the education of their children. Last year I had some parents who came in and helped around the classroom. This was great. Last year and this year my wife has helped in our children's classes. Parents in the classroom not only help the children learn better, but it reinforces the idea that education is important. Children that see parent volunteers see how parents value education. Other parents due to work schedules and other conflicts are unable to work in the class but many contribute by correcting homework, coming along on field trips, making a presentation to the class of their career, hobbies or interests, and by attending PTA meetings.

As much as we need teachers, books and money, without parents the education of our children would suffer greatly. I'd like to extend a special thanks to our parents for the job they do for their children in West Sacramento. Our parens are the glue that holds together not only our schools but also our community.

Parking at civic center

On August 26 at City Hall, we had an informational meeting regarding plans and expectations for our new city hall/Community Center/Senior Center at Merkley/West Capitol Ave. and will blend in with our existing library, including the access to/from factor. The proposed 3-story structure appears to be quite an effective use of limited land -- going only as far west as (sparing) Carroll's Restaurant, or about halfway from Merkley/West Capitol to Jefferson Blvd./W. Cap. Ave.

While the proposed 47,000 sq. ft. City office building is projected to meet our expanded needs for 10 years from now, it does not appear to meet the parking needs of those greater numbers who will no doubt visit the more accessible City Hall, etc. for years to come. And since City owns the vacant land across West Capitol Ave., Redevelopment Director Val Toppenberg's indication that said vacant land would probably be utilized to park city vehicles. It could also accommodate overflow public parking. With such anticipated pedestrian-crossing increase, it would seem wise to install signals/pedestrian crossings at West Capitol Ave./Merkley Ave. While a simple parking lot may satisfy our needs for now, multi-level may be the message of the future.

And since the Carl's Jr. and Taco Bell on Harbor Blvd. are being threatened by the widening of Harbor Blvd. to Industrial Park (over Business 80), maybe they should be offered first options for leases on portions of that now-vacant land (ironically, from where Taco Bell was forced out by City), depending on City's plans for food service at new location. A 3-story or 4-story parking garage should be included in our plans so that if we want same later, we could also have an elevated, weather-protected crosswalk between City Hall, etc. and its overflow parking north.

This appears to be an opportune time to carve out a turn-out-area/bus stop on each side, relocating the 2 nearest bus shelters accordingly, with each facing north for protection from rain during heavy storms and plant shade trees accordingly; i.e., protection from afternoon summer heat. Such action would improve access to our new City Hall/Senior Center/Comm. Center/Library, and could improve air quality, as more would be encouraged to leave the vehicle at home.

With such positive hopes for all of the above, let's hope we take steps to improve social opportunities for non-seniors, too. Refurbishing of El Rancho Bowl sounds like a step in that direction. But just having everything

Your baby is beautiful. And may be the picture of health. But there's also a one in four chance he or she isn't up-to-date with immunizations. One in four.

Your child needs more than 12 shots over the course of five visits, before the age of two.

So never assume your baby is on schedule. Ask your doctor at every visit.

That way, you'll be certain you're giving your child a fair shot. And that's the most beautiful thing of all.

Drunk driving

One year ago, the world mourned the sudden, tragic death of Princess Diana. We were all reminded that no one is immune to drunk driving.

In fact, an estimated 236 Americans across the country were killed in alcohol-related crashes during the Labor Day weekend last year -- a holiday traditionally associated with drinking and driving and boating as Americans mark the end of summer.

To help prevent deaths and injuries caused by the dangerous mix of alcohol and driving, MADD has designated September 1-7 as National Sobriety Checkpoint Week. Law enforcement agencies here and across the country will be cracking down on drunk drivers with increased sobriety checkpoints and other enforcement measures. The program is supported by groups such as the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Transportation Safety Board, the National Sheriff's Association, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, and many others.

Sobriety checkpoints are one of the most effective weapons we have in the war against drunk driving. These brief stops serve to deter motorists from drinking and driving and provide an opportunity to remind everyone to wear safety belts -- one of our best defenses in a crash.

MADD and Nationwide Insurance are asking all citizens to support law enforcement officers as they work to ensure safe travel for us all during the Labor Day holiday. Please call local police and encourage them to use sobriety checkpoints during this week and throughout the year. We should all express our gratitude for the commitment of our public safety officials as they work to protect travelers from the threat of drunk drivers.

Wishing a safe holiday for all of our community.

The Economic Development Council also has an executive committee consisting of Chair David Rosenberg, a Yolo County Supervisor; Vice-Chair Mel Losoya, Mayor of Woodland; and each of the six action committee chairs.

"Our goal is to kick start Yolo County's economic development," Rosenberg stated in announcing the committee assignments. "Let's develop a two-year plan with specific objectives. We'll work together to meet those objectives and advance our economy."

Each action committee is expected bo meet at least once prior to the Economic Development Council meeting at 7:30 a.m. on Sept. 30, at the training room in the Erwin Meier Administration Building, 625 Court St., Woodland.

Thomson bill clears way for $800,000 in vehicle license fees to be released to West Sac

A budget trailer bill which will provide an additional $800,000 in motor vehicle license fees to the city of West Sacramento over the next two years was approved by Governor Wilson Aug. 24. The bill was sponsored by Assemblywoman Helen Thomson.

"After West Sacramento Mayor Wes Beers approached me regarding difficulties the City was having convincing the Controller's office to release funds it was expecting, I offered to do what I could to resolve the problem," Thomson was quoted in a press release. "Less than a month after identifying a legislative solution, I'm pleased to report that the bill has successfully worked its way through the Legislature and passed the scrutiny of the Governor. That's record time."

The $800,000 question emerged because of West Sacramento's nature as a new city (11 years old) and the state's policy of aiding young city's with extra allotments of the money from vehicle license fees. This allotment expired while the state was still mired in the recession, and West Sacramento and other young cities argued for an extension, saying they had not yet had a fair chance to square away their local economies.

An extension was fashioned, but after it was approved, the state controller's office interpreted the extension in such a way that it was not retroactive, and Thomson's bill was designed to remedy that conflict and free up the $800,000.
